Situation	Person Responsible and Why
A friend asks you to watch his camera while he uses a public restroom. He places the camera on the table in front of you. While you are waiting, another person bumps the table. The camera falls to the ground, breaking the lens. Are you liable for the damage?	I am not liable because my friend, the bailor, received the sole benefit of the bailment.
You drop off your car at a garage to be repaired. The mechanic gives you an estimate for the repairs. You agree to have him perform the work. The mechanic stacks some tools next to your car. The tools fall and hit your car, making a large dent. Is the mechanic liable for the damage?	The mechanic is liable because this is a mutual benefit bailment – both parties benefit from the agreement. The mechanic did not use reasonable care when he placed the tools next to my car.
You are in possession of an antique table that you wish to sell. You consign the antique to a dealer who will try to sell it for you. The dealer arrives at the gallery one morning and notices a large scratch on the table. The dealer never noticed the scratch before and does not know how it got there. Who is responsible for the damage?	The dealer is probably responsible because the burden of proof rests on the dealer as the bailee. The dealer is in the best position to know what happened.
You check into a hotel room and leave to eat at a nearby restaurant. While you are gone, another hotel guest accidentally sets the building on fire by leaving an iron turned on. Your possessions are destroyed in the fire. Is the hotel keeper liable for your property loss?	The hotel keeper is not liable. It was an accidental fire in which no negligence can be attributed to the hotel keeper.
